

Call for Papers for the issue

---

PHILOSOPHY IN 21ST CENTURY POLITICAL SCIENCE

---

Are values important for political science? Is it possible to study democracy without theory? Empirical political science has often ignored normative approaches and vice versa. At the beginning of the 21st century, the situation changed and political philosophy became more important again. What is the role of political philosophy in contemporary political science? Should political scientists read Wittgenstein or Hegel? And why?

Journal:

Central European Journal of Politics

ISSN 2464-479X (Online)

<http://www.cejop.cz>

Guest editor of the issue:

Petr Bláha (petr.blahaml@ujep.cz)

Affiliation: Department of Political Science, Faculty of Arts, J. E. Purkyně University, Ústí and Labem (Czech Republic)

Word count: 8,000 max. (incl. references)

Timetable:

- 30 April 2021: Deadline for abstracts (200-300 words via mail petr.blahaml@ujep.cz)
- 10 May 2021: Decisions on acceptance or rejection of abstracts
- 30 September 2021: submission of full papers (will be submitted further to the CEJOP for double-blind peer review process)
- 31 October 2021: results of the review process
- 30 November 2021: revisions according to the requirements and/or recommendations of the review and finalization results
- 15 December 2021: online publication

We are interested in papers on these topics:

- Methodology of normative political science
- Role of theory in contemporary political science
- Modern theories and models of democracy
- Contemporary political thought
- Philosophical reflection of the crisis of democracy

We accept papers in English, Czech and Slovak language.